Seven-year-old girl writes letter of complaint to Lego

Seven-year-old Charlotte Benjamin no longer likes to play with the girl Lego figures. In an angry letter to the company, Lego fan Charlotte set out her list of complaints.

"I am 7 years old and I love Lego but I don't like that there are more Lego boy people and barely any Lego girls," she writes.

Charlotte is also bored of having to play with pink Lego and all the dull things that the girl Legos are left to do.

"Today I went to a store and saw Legos in two sections: the girls pink and the boys blue," she writes. "All the girls did was sit at home, go to the beach, and shop, and they had no jobs, but the boys went on adventures, worked, saved people, and had jobs, even swam with sharks," she adds.

Charlotte's father, a 35-year-old teacher, sent the letter to the editor of a magazine, who posted it to social media. Charlotte's frustrations have obviously hit a nerve. The entry has already received 1,390 likes on Twitter as well as 4,107 likes on Facebook and has been picked up by media all around the world.

Many of the people who agree with Charlotte are mothers of young children with similar experiences. They come from places as far away as Hong Kong, Cape Town, and Chicago. The roles of the Lego boy and girl figures no longer reflect the situations in the real world, they say. It's time for Lego to make a change.

It's not the first time that the toy company Lego has been criticized for its boy/girl toys. As an answer to Charlotte's criticism, Lego has produced its first female lab scientist figure.

Not only Charlotte, but all other young girls who like climbing trees and playing football instead of playing quietly with dolls will be glad about this development.

Charlotte writes, "I want you to make more Lego girl people and let them go on adventures and have fun, okay?"

Yes, Lego, we think that you and other toy makers out there should produce more adventure sets for girls, too.

Part 4 – Questions 18 – 25

Read the text below and then match the sentences.

The Babysitter

A young girl wanted to work as a babysitter for a couple who lived in a large, old, isolated house. They were going to the movies that night and left the babysitter to look after their two young children.

First, the babysitter put the children to bed and went downstairs to watch TV. Suddenly, she heard the phone ringing. When she answered it, all she heard was heavy breathing followed by a man's voice asking, "Have you checked on the children?"

Freaked out, she hung up the phone, trying to convince herself that it was just someone playing a trick on her. She went back to the TV but about fifteen minutes later, the phone rang again. She answered the phone but only heard laughter from the other end of the line. Then the same voice asked, "Why haven't you checked on the children?"

The babysitter slammed down the phone. The poor girl was very frightened and immediately called the police. The police told the babysitter that if the man called again, she should try to keep him talking. That would give them time to trace the call.

A few minutes later, the phone rang a third time and when the babysitter answered it, she heard the heavy breathing again. The voice on the line said, "You should really check on the children now."

She hung up the phone and almost immediately, it rang again. This time it was the police who shouted, "Get out of the house right now! The calls are coming from the upstairs phone!" The babysitter dropped the phone in shock and suddenly she heard footsteps on the stairs. Without pausing for a second, she ran out of the house as fast as she could. Just as she closed the front door behind her, a man's hand slammed against the glass. Then a police car arrived.

The police found the two children hiding in a closet. In the parents' bedroom, there was a bloody axe lying on the floor next to the upstairs phone. But there was no sign of the man who had made the phone calls.
